

E. Allan Lind is the James L. Vincent Distinguished Professor of Leadership at the Fuqua School of Business, Duke University. Until recently he co-directed Duke's Center on Leadership and Ethics; he formerly was the Director of the Center for Excellence in Business Education.

Professor Lind's teaching interests center on leadership and global management issues. He teaches MBA courses on leadership, management, culture, and ethics in Duke's on-site and distance-mediated programs, and he teaches executive education classes on leadership, teams and virtual teams, global culture and business, and change and innovation. His research interests include the study of leadership, business relationships, organizational behavior and conflict management, with special emphasis on culture and effective management practices. In particular, he studies how leaders and managers can enhance the development of initiative and trust, the acceptance of organizational authority and the resolution of disputes and conflicts in organizations.

Prior to coming to Duke, he did policy research on law, counter-terrorism, and military leadership and decision making at the RAND Corporation in California. He taught in Departments of Psychology at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, the University of Washington, and at the University of New Hampshire, and he held a staff position in the research and development arm of the U.S. Federal Courts. For five years, he held the Leiden University Fund Chair Visiting Professorship in Social Conflict and Social Justice at the University of Leiden in the Netherlands, and for four years he was Visiting Professor of Leadership Studies at the University of Auckland in New Zealand. He did his doctoral dissertation research in Paris and has conducted research in France, Germany, Great Britain, New Zealand, Australia, the Netherlands, China, India, the Philippines and Japan. He is a Fellow of the Association of Psychological Sciences.

Professor Lind has published more than 100 research papers in major scholarly journals around the world. He has received grants from the U.S. National Science Foundation, the Japanese Federal Science Foundation and the Ford Foundation in support of his research. His book on the psychology of fairness in organizational, political, and social contexts is one of the 50 most cited works in his home field of social psychology.

He received his PhD and MA from the University of North Carolina and his BA from the University of Florida.
