Duke business school offering classes via Web

DURHAM (AP) — Duke University's business school will offer live broadcasts of a class on the World Wide Web beginning next month for working students.

The one-of-a-kind course on global asset allocation and stock selection will be broadcast live Mondays and Thursdays beginning Jan. 22. Duke said it will be the first university to offer a live Web broadcast of a regularly scheduled Master's of Business Administration course to students outside its campus.

The course is designed for businesspeople who are not in the MBA program at Duke's Fuqua School of Business.

The Web class "is for the people who don't want to go for the full MBA, but what they do want is to pick off the things they need," said Campbell Harvey, a finance professor who will teach the course.

The course will be archived on the Web for students around the globe who can't make live viewing of the class.
