Duke offers class live on Web

DURHAM (AP) - Duke University's business school will offer live broadcasts of a class on the World Wide Web beginning next month for working students.

The one-of-a-kind course on global asset allocation and stock selection will be broadcast live Mondays and Thursdays beginning Jan. 22.

Duke said it will be the first university to offer a live Web broadcast of a regularly scheduled master's of business administration course to students outside its campus.
