The world will never move towards recession again - Part 2

Similarly, Jerome Powell, the chairman of the US Federal Reserve, stated that "interest rates might be raised six more times this year alone to lower inflation" after boosting them by a quarter last month. The reversal of the growth rate of interest rates on short- and long-term US bonds is another indicator of the recession. This indicates that investors have lost faith in the future.

When investors invest in low-risk debt securities rather than equities in the markets, they see a similar reversal. This was the scenario in the united states prior to the Great Depression of 1955. The durations between each reversal effect and the decline, however, differ. Campbell R. Harvey, a pioneer who predicted a recession using the reverse effect, observed, "The growth line does not stretch upwards throughout the quarter, indicating that the contraction is not yet complete. However, a recession is a distinct possibility." He said that he confessed to his crimes after being tortured.

According to a poll conducted by CNBC last month, 81 percent of adults in the united states expect the recession will begin this year. Coleman Sachs economists, on the other hand, predict that the US recession will be only 20-35 percent next year. "Riden's
